out of ten. if they are not solved by the first man who wishes to victimize them, they immo at an offer of marriage from it may be. a lazy, tille fellow, who is a drunteard, or who intends to desert them after a short period. The penalty of declaring that they had an affairof the heart on hand would, in most instances, be the technical warning to pack their boxes within a given time. Hence arise a number of those miserable scenes in our police courts. o where women with battered faces and stultified intellects are driven by the cone ty of their hua-- hands to ask the law for protection. For them the Divorce Court is still too expensive, and there are other reasons why it is impossible to relieve them by that machinery. A lady may go there, and have a dissolution of marriage from a disagreeable bushard, and compel him to maintain her besides. The poor greature who has been taken from the kitchen or the charge of the nursery cannot expect a asparate maintenance, and she often pleads for a mitigation of the mild panalties which the Legislature imposes for kicking her and bending pokers on her hody, simply because they would avolve her possible starration and the starvation of her children. Here, than, is an siditional argument for permitting women of this class more apportunities than they at present have for judging of the characters of the men who pay court to them. It is useless to say that they have no business marrying at all. Porhaps not; but marry they will, in spite of Malthus or all the decirinaires who recruyenned oversurplus populations and inefficient ampplies of books on political or meany. In fact, the more domestic servants marry, the more chances are there of removing part of that seandalons record of winch we hinted. In Frances in Italy, and in of corvents and tradesmen; at which English ladies would open their eyes. They are allowed. to have their admirers call for them anreservedly and at certain times, and the mistress of the house ing generally takes a friendly interest in the progross of the constalip. Nothing half so bad comes of this apparent license as seems to proseed from the severer discipline of the enstore in this country. To be sure, on the Continent those persons have many advantages which tend to render the privileges innocuous. First, of all, they are of infinitely superior culture-a French or a German maid-servant leaving about ber an air of real polish and refinement, which contrasts remarkably with the pitiable ministic affectations of an English girl in the same position. Then, whatever we may houst of the courage, the worth, and the sterling honesty, as. it is phrased, of our fature masters, we cannot hidefromourselves that they dother love-making as a rule in a rough-und-ready fashion, which leads to much more disastrons consequences than the patient callentry of Frenchmen of Germans under similar circumstances. The contag nature of our cheap entertainments also helps to hinder the chances of happiness th of amongst our female domes los. La lies might partly excuse themselves for their rigid enacthisas ments against followers by urging the low. to be the reach or taste of working men, but they notice the reach of take of working a thoughtful or to the se charitable a light as this. They are content and with suppressing the most womanly part of the with suppressing the most womanly part of the aring. dispositions of their meninds; and it is to be lives feared that many of them take a sart of sarage delight in the operation. The lot of a servant delight in the operation. The for or a secret of several is not so agreeable as to reader the prospect of a not so agreeable as to reader the prospect of and most bolding it for life even tolerable; and most women in this station will prefer to face the. chances of any wratchedness in marriage to that of perpetual servitude without it. If we

Meantime however the natives have kept greatly in very quiet and continue to pursue the "holding to's terms, out" cautious policy that has characterized their commercial movements for some tirue pust. The onsequence is that with very few exceptions the business reported below has been of this speculative nature. The quantity of goods that have gone into consumption has been almost ail, and in some he female limitances foreigners have even purchased buck gottitty, from native dadlers their own goods, It is generown. They ally admitted on all sides that the Chinese areas pre-and are met | sent | carrying no stocks whatever; that their namages to purchases are merely for the supply of the local trade, omehow or in reality a rigid practice of the hand to mouth
